Ergonomics Specialist

Did you know that many people get hurt at work because of bad posture habits? Sitting at a desk all day without stretching or taking a break can really make you sore. That's why we need ergonomics specialists! Ergonomics specialists teach employees good posture and stretching habits so employees don't get hurt on the job. They help check and position equipment to make working as comfortable and safe as possible for hard working employees.

Safety Inspector

Safety inspectors perform many duties to ensure that workplaces, building sites, and structures are secure. They also train workers to identify workplace hazards. During inspections, safety inspectors look for chemical, physical, or biological hazards and collect samples of potentially toxic materials. They often work with specialists who are better trained for identifying hazardous materials and situations. They also work with employers or builders to correct those problems.
